differentiated agenda, a fresh school of speakers, delegates diversity as well as Chatham House Rule private and exclusive experiences to its niche audience of digital infrastructure business executives, investors, financiers, bankers, senior legal advisers, real estate professionals, strategists, and trendspotters.

In keeping with the uniqueness of the event, this will be an invitation-only/pre-approved gathering and places will be limited.

Also taking place on the same day, The Tech Capital is equally pleased to announce the second edition of The Tech Capital Global Awards.

In 2023, we are introducing four new categories, bringing the number of accolades up to 12 to recognise the many talented individuals, teams and companies operating in the digital infrastructure finance, investment, legal and development spheres.

The nominations period will open on January 2, 2023, and run through to March 31. The awards will be judged by an illustrious and independent global panel of judges with a diversified set of skills and industry backgrounds.

More information regarding IFF23 and The Tech Capital Awards will be released in the coming weeks and months, including agenda, orators, judges, sponsors and partners.

“Diminishing market access barriers for a range of investment vehicles, coupled with huge capital commitments into new infrastructure assets and ongoing digital demand, has positioned this sector as a top-tier market for most global and local investors. Through the International Finance Forum, The Tech Capital offers companies of different backgrounds and ‘at the heart of power’ an opportunity to debate, inspire and connect, all in a curated and private setting, unique to IFF,” said João Marques Lima, founder and editor of The Tech Capital.

“For 2023, we have found the perfect home for this one-of-a-kind Forum, and we are beyond static with the opportunities and elements we can and will be adding to the experience for our attendees. I would also like to thank our IFF23 sponsors and partners, as well as our market advisors for their continuous support. The countdown is on, and the next 197 days will see a lot of surprises being announced.”
