"EMR integrations are an essential element of our nurse-centric, patient-focused medication management model," Enclara CEO Mark Morse said. "By eliminating the need to manually re-enter prescription and medication information from one system to another, we reduce the administrative burden to staff while preventing errors and ultimately improving care. Every minute of time we can give back to nurses is another minute that they can spend with their patients."

"An integrated approach to healthcare is the future of the industry. We are steadfast in our efforts to help customers have a more connected experience. Our collaboration will provide a seamless level of service for our shared clients that will ultimately improve patient care," Careficient Chief Operating Officer Brad Caldwell said.
