Increasing population over the years has resulted in high demand for food, which, in turn, is anticipated to drive market revenue growth. Conventional agricultural practices depend heavily on external factors such as rain and temperature, which have been significantly affected by climate change. Food insecurity and rising global hunger index have impelled governments and companies to explore sustainable methods of alternative farming. Aquaponics and hydroponic systems of farming are cost-effective and have significantly higher yields than conventional farming, and this is a major factor driving growth of the global aquaponic and hydroponic systems and equipment market revenue. However, regular monitoring of the system in order to maintain nutrient content and pH value of water is required, along with technical expertise in order to increase productivity. In addition, lack of awareness and knowledge about alternative farming practices in underdeveloped countries is another major cause hindering growth of the aquaponics and hydroponic systems and equipment market.
