are ideal for various types of surfaces, for instance, they can be utilized for cleaning gardens, furniture, decks, and many others. Market companies are also investing in increasing their portability and incorporating advanced features such as remote monitoring & control and others.

However, factors such as availability of alternatives and government regulations imposed on disposal of wastewater and water pollution are restraining market revenue growth. Pressure washers are extensively utilized for cleaning of various objects and surfaces. They help in removing dust, dirt, grime, oil, grease, and toxic chemicals from equipment, vehicles, machines, and surfaces. Removal of contaminants from these objects through water blast may run along with water into a storm drain, which is not treated before entering lakes and rivers, resulting in water pollution. Hence, it is essential to develop a sanitary sewer for disposal of wastewater and avoid water pollution. Pressure washers have a powerful blast of water that can be too much for some surfaces. Exterior surfaces, such as loose wood or loose vinyl siding, cannot withstand excessive pressure and will fall off, deteriorate, or even crack because of water pressure. In addition, if surface is painted, pressure washers can damage paint and cause it to peel off. As a result, end users prefer various alternative methods for cleaning a variety of objects and surfaces. Sandblasting and foam cleaning techniques are two of the alternatives preferred by end users.
