TAMPA, FLORIDA, USA, November 15, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- With the midterm elections over, although results still continue to come in for some key areas, The Preferred Group of Tampa, a collection agency in Tampa, stands ready to work with new and returning legislators at the state and federal level and continue its strong advocacy strategy on behalf of members.

Redistricting and new census counts influenced the election and candidate pool leading up to Nov. 8, as did the more than 40 House retirements, including 29 Democrats and 13 Republicans.

There were nearly 500 election races in the midterms, including 34 seats in the U.S. Senate and the entire U.S. House of Representatives—435 seats.

“The Preferred Group of Tampa has worked to educate candidates on both sides of the aisle about the value the accounts receivable management industry provides and looks forward to working with new congressional leadership,” said David Kelley, owner of The Preferred Group of Tampa. “We will not slow down in efforts to educate new members of Congress, as well as those returning to Capitol Hill, about the tremendous benefit we provide to the quality of life of everyday Americans through their participation in the credit-based economy.”

If there is a shift in party control in Congress, there could be major implications for the accounts receivable management (ARM) industry.

“We will continue to advocate on issues relevant to the ARM industry and look forward to working with new and veteran legislators in Congress and on key committees for the industry, including the House Financial Services Committee and the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs,” Kelley said.

Academic research has confirmed the basic economic reality that losses from uncollected debts result in higher prices and restricted access to credit. The Tampa debt collection services company looks forward to educating lawmakers about the critical role the collections process plays in a healthy state and national economy.
