The Readers Glass Critic's Review tells readers how H. Allenger put a charm in his works and how it poses as a study of what makes humans tick. "Ultimately, what makes The Damned of Magdeburg an intriguing and engaging read is not so much that it is full of historical references but that much of what the characters go through resonate with the present." they added.

H. Allenger was born in Montana, a western state in the United States of America. Allenger also served in the army for many years and now resides in Seattle, Washington. Allenger is also a history enthusiast and has been passionate about art, history, mythology, and writing since he retired in 2008. He earned his Bachelor of Art in Political Science from Eastern Washington State College and his Master's Degree in Internal Relations from the University of Arkansas while serving in the army.
