commitment to the development of peace, non-violence and oneness among humanity in the world.

During the Memphis visit, Gurudev will also visit the National Civil Rights Museum—a pivotal landmark in the history of non-violence and social transformation in the US. Gurudev's fundamental philosophy of a stress-free, violence-free society has dynamic implications for the individual and society at large.

Gurudev's global "I Stand for Peace" tour will culminate next year with a grand celebration of humanity at the iconic National Mall in Washington, D.C. 60 years after Dr. King's famous "I have a dream" speech, from the very same place, Gurudev will once again send out the message of global peace and harmony in diversity.

In times when society has gotten increasingly polarized, Gurudev reminds us to not just accept the differences but to celebrate them. "Diversity is the beauty of creation. It needs to be honored, acknowledged and celebrated," said Gurudev.

As a contemporary ambassador of non-violence, Gurudev's intervention brought about a cease-fire in the Colombian Conflict, which had claimed over 200,000 civilian lives; helped end a generations-old sectarian conflict in India; and most recently has helped bring gang members and law enforcement together in inner cities in the US. He has also mediated and progressed negotiations for peace in conflict-stricken areas such as Sri Lanka, Iraq, and Venezuela.
