CALGARY, AB, CANADA, March 9, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The smartphone and increasingly widespread internet access have revolutionized on-demand services. Home cleaning, food delivery, flowers, laundry, you name it, and you can get it now. The service industry is being transformed by technology. What comes next? The trucking industry will undergo significant changes as it becomes the next industry to provide on-demand services.

Trucking companies in Ontario are attempting to create a marketplace where drivers and customers can connect remotely using on-demand models. Customers who need goods shipped will submit a digital request, and nearby freelance truck drivers will respond online in real time.

How will technology companies deploy on-demand trucking services?

The concept is straightforward and has been tested in other industries: Carriers and shippers connect directly to professional drivers via a web platform and smartphone. Owner-operators who join will have more opportunities in a larger and more connected marketplace, allowing them to make more money. It will result in cost and time savings for shippers (and where there are savings, there is demand).

What are the advantages?

Using a web platform to connect shippers and truckers, you can take margin and costs away from the broker. However, as is frequently stated, the market rewards those who adapt the best, and no one today laments the horse-and-buggy brokers of the early twentieth century.

Each party has an immediate, on-demand connection to assistance:

- Reduced cost
- Increased visibility throughout the supply chain
- Prevents trucks from moving when they are empty
- Improved container utilization
- Automated procedure
- The reduced administrative burden on both parties

An on-demand model for trucking companies in Calgary will provide several advantages to truckers and businesses. Connecting to a marketplace that eliminates the need for brokers means more money in the trucker's pocket. Truckers will also have fewer empty hauls because all markets are expected to offer more opportunities. Payments are also made easier with on-demand platforms.

Drivers could be paid immediately after delivery or while on the road.

Shipping performance reflects the reputation of a company. Every business needs a seasoned freight broker, not a new, unknown start-up. No one can afford to take any chances when transporting finished goods to customers. Communication about shipment quoting and status must be clear, accurate, and detailed.
