ISLE OF MAN, ISLE OF MAN, November 25, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Functional Milk Replacers Market Size Analysis:

The functional milk replacers market is expected to grow at a CAGR of % from 2018 to 2028. The Asia-Pacific region is projected to be the largest market for functional milk replacers during the forecast period.

Milk replacers are made from substances that are easily digested by newborn animals, are nutrient-dense, and are inexpensive for farmers to use. Furthermore, functional milk replacers, also known as milk substitutes, are made from a variety of basic materials with the goal of replicating the nutritional characteristics of cow's milk and are given to newborn calves when real milk is unavailable or impractical. These milk replacers are critical for improving and maintaining the health of calves in their early stages. Milk replacers require special ingredients because newborn animals cannot digest standard feed materials such as soybean meal, maize, or byproduct substances. Traditionally, the ingredients used in milk substitutes are leftovers from the processing of milk to make butter or cheese. Milk fat and water combine to form butter and a byproduct known as "skim milk" or "nonfat dry milk," which contains casein and whey proteins, lactose, and minerals. Whey is a byproduct of cheese manufacturing. Casein, butterfat, calcium, and phosphorus are found in cheese, whereas whey contains whey proteins and lactose, as well as varying levels of sodium, potassium, and chloride that may be added during the cheese-making process. Nonfat dry milk contains approximately 35% protein, whereas whey protein concentrate, or "WPC," contains 34% protein after lactose is removed via crystallisation or ultrafiltration.

For many years, the industry's functional milk replacer contained 20% protein and 20% fat (20/20) and was delivered at a rate of one pound per day, barely meeting the calorie requirements of a 100-pound calf. The 20/20 milk replacer was created as a finishing milk replacer for veal calves and was never meant to be fed to newborn calves because 20% protein is insufficient for proper development and 20% fat is too high to maximize starter feed intake, which is the primary driver of rumen development.

COVID-19 Scenario:

The outbreak of COVID-19 has led to a decrease in demand for milk and other dairy products, as consumers are either cutting back on spending or switching to cheaper alternatives. This has resulted in a decline in revenue for the functional milk substitute market. However, the market is expected to recover in the latter half of 2020 as economies begin to reopen and consumer confidence improves.

Report Coverage:
