Willie Powells also shares that it is extremely important to capture the aftermath of the accident as close as it actually happened. In other words, it is better to capture photos and videos before moving vehicles in non-injury crashes to the side of the road. This should only be done if it can be completed safely.

He continues by encouraging accident victims to gather contact information from eyewitnesses. Ask witnesses for their names, phone numbers, addresses, etc. This information could be extremely useful in providing your case in a court of law.
