

Dental Offices Should be Ready for End-of-Year Crush of Patients

Patients become aware of insurance plans and tax benefits associated with incurring dental costs in 2022 and begin scheduling appointments at the last minute.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, CANADA, November 29, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Dr. James Younger, a practicing dentist and the founder and CEO of TempStars, North America's largest and most respected dental temping and hiring service, is preparing for the usual rush of patients in late December.

This is the time of the year, where dental offices can demonstrate flexibility to patients by fitting them in before December 31. It is also an opportunity to capture revenues that might be lost.”

Dr. Younger notes that patients in Canada, as well as the United States, typically become aware of their insurance plans and tax benefits associated with incurring their dental costs in 2022 and will begin scheduling appointments at the last minute.

“This is the time of the year, where dental offices can demonstrate their flexibility to patients by fitting them in before December 31,” said Dr. Younger. “Of course, this is also a terrific opportunity for the office to capture revenues that otherwise might be lost.”

Dr. Younger offered three different ways to satisfy the aforementioned twin objectives:

First, offices should identify their preferred hygienists and dental assistants from the temporary workforce available through TempStars before they are booked for other offices.

Second, be creative about ways to increase office capacity for patients, utilizing empty chair time, etc.

Third, check with your local dental labs about their holiday schedules and “squeeze-in” policies for those cases that require lab work.

“Creating a stress-free holiday and end-of-the year experience for your full-time employees and patients should not be underestimated,” said Dr. Younger. “If these suggestions can help in some way, then we feel like we are fulfilling our mission of bringing greater efficiency and profitability to the industry.”
