

Tupperware's Unexpectedly Beautiful Art Collection is so much more than Leftovers

Household names in modern art take center stage as the Tupperware Brands corporate collection is being auctioned this Saturday at Palm Beach Modern Auctions.

LAKE WORTH BEACH, FLORIDA, UNITED STATES, November 29, 2022

/EINPresswire.com/ -- When Palm Beach Modern's auctioneer Rico Baca stepped foot on the Tupperware Brands campus, he knew he was there to look at art that could be sold to the advantage of both firms. What he didn't expect was the magnitude and importance of the collection.

"There was art everywhere," says Baca. "Paintings lined hallways, conference rooms and climate-controlled storage units. I recognized many of the artists immediately. Who knew that this iconic name in housewares held an art collection representing some of the most noteworthy names in modern art? Not just big names, but big colorful paintings, any one of which would be joyful to own. It was stunning."

From that initial meeting, the timetable was quick. The tour was followed by conferences, contracts and a second trip to Orlando...this time with admin staff and a team of movers to transport the art to the auction house Lake Worth Beach for photography, cataloging and display. Fast forward a few weeks, and fifty-six of the more than eight hundred works are on the walls at Palm Beach Modern Auctions, ready for viewing.

Baca continues, "This has the feel of a gallery opening. All these pieces by Richard Anuszkiewicz, Paul Jenkins, Richard Mayhew and Robert Natkin and others...they've been out of the public eye for forty to fifty years. Most were acquired by Tupperware in the 70s and 80s. They're ready for
