What is blood gas and electrolyte analyzer?

Blood gas and electrolyte analyzers represent the medical devices customized for determining several parameters in a whole blood sample, including potential hydrogen (pH), blood gas (partial pressure of carbon dioxide and oxygen), metabolites, and electrolytes. In terms of modality, they are available in benchtop and portable models. Blood gas and electrolyte analyzer products are effective in detecting metabolic imbalances and the measurement of renal and cardiac functions. They aid in measuring the acid-base balance of a patient, diabetes, drug consumption, etc. Blood gas and electrolyte analyzer instruments are cost-effective and provide accurate and fast results. Consequently, they find extensive applications across various establishments, such as hospitals, clinics, ambulatory surgical centers, etc.

Impact of COVID-19:

We are regularly tracking the direct effect of COVID-19 on the market, along with the indirect influence of associated industries. These observations will be integrated into the report.

What is the major drivers for the blood gas and electrolyte analyzer market?

The escalating number of patients in operating rooms, intensive care units (ICUs), and emergency departments is primarily driving the blood gas and electrolyte analyzer market. Furthermore, the increasing prevalence of chronic diseases among the geriatric population and the elevating demand for high throughput, integrated, and automated systems are acting as significant growth-inducing factors.

Additionally, the growing product usage with laboratory information systems and electronic medical records for streamlining the workflow and enabling effective monitoring of patient health is also positively influencing the market growth. Besides this, the inflating investments by key market players to develop portable product variants with easy-to-use features and minimum maintenance requirements and the shifting preferences toward point-of-care testing (POCT) are expected to propel the blood gas and electrolyte analyzer market over the forecasted period.
