How big is the endpoint security market?

The global endpoint security market reached a value of US$ 14.63 Billion in 2021. Looking forward, IMARC Group expects the market to reach a value of US$ 28.29 Billion by 2027, exhibiting a growth rate (CAGR) of 11.20% during 2022-2027.

What is endpoint security?

Endpoint security includes software and services that are utilized for safeguarding the data and workflow of end-user devices, including desktops, laptops, and mobile phones, from being exploited by cyberattacks and malicious threats. They examine the files entering the network and secure endpoints through application control and encryption. Endpoint security solutions simplify security management, enhance business resilience, and improve the overall revenue. They use endpoint detection and response (EDR) that allow advanced threat detection, polymorphic attacks, zero-day attacks, etc. Consequently, endpoint security services find extensive utilizations across numerous sectors, such as banking, financial services, and insurance (BFSI), healthcare, IT, telecommunications, government, defense, manufacturing, retail, e-commerce, etc.

What are the factors driving the endpoint security market?

The increasing number of and sophistication in cybersecurity threats, including hacktivism, malicious and accidental insider attacks, and organized crimes, is primarily driving the endpoint security market. Besides this, the emerging trend of bring your own device (BYOD) and the elevating adoption of remote work procedures in small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) are also positively influencing the global market.

Furthermore, the launch of artificial intelligence (AI) and machine learning enabled solutions in cloud-based models that reduce the need to store the database of threat information locally and provide enhanced scalability is acting as another significant growth-inducing factor. Additionally, the expanding adoption of the internet of things (IoT), industrial control systems, and smart sensors is expected to propel the endpoint security market in the coming years.
