Mediastinoscope is a device that is used in mediastinoscopy wherein, this device is used to make an insertion into the mediastinum making small incisions so as to diagnose and treat any unwanted growths such as a tumour. The procedure involves use of mediastinoscope which helps to examine the mediastinum or the space behind the breast bone and between the two lungs. The medical services provider will make a little cut simply over the breastbone. The person will utilize a finger to make a path into the mediastinum and analyse the lymph nodes by contact. The mediastinoscope will be passed through the way. Tissue tests might be taken for the purpose of biopsy.

Increase in the lung cancer patients and patients with tumour in mediastinum are the leading factor responsible for the growth of this market. Further the global aim to diagnose cancer at an early stage and get rid of it is also acting as a growth driver for the market. Increasing awareness about cancer and increasing health expenditure especially in the developing countries is further boosting the mediastinoscopes market value.
