Cellular Glass Market

Cellular glass represents an insulation material that has an appearance similar to sponge and is composed of crushed glass and limestone or carbon. It is available in block and shell and foam glass gravel categories. These cellular glass variants are lightweight, chemically inert, and fiber-free and have excellent mechanical properties as compared to other types of insulation materials. They further have high compressive strength and thermal conductivity. Consequently, cellular glass products find widespread applications in residential, commercial, and industrial construction across countries.
