Southern California experiences about 10,000 earthquakes each year, though the majority of these are minor tremors. However, the frequent nature of the earth’s plates shifting is bound to take its toll on the foundations of buildings. While most homes and buildings in this part of the country are reinforced, the chances of damage are still pretty high.

Foundation repair Los Angeles firms usually offer foundation retrofitting services to bolster the strength of an existing foundation. Before a foundation can be repaired or retrofitted, it should be inspected to find out if it is damaged and the extent of the damage, if any. In case of damage, there are various ways that a foundation can be repaired. But only a certified foundation inspector can carry out such an audit.

Some of the most common ways to tell if a foundation is damaged are if there are cracks in the walls of the house. The basement could also have gaps, and doors could be hard to close, thanks to a shifting foundation or tilting structure. Foundation Repair LA offers various foundation repair services to fix such a situation.
