A pyrometer is a remote-sensing thermometer that measures the temperature of a surface without making direct contact with it. With the use of electromagnetic radiation, it can also be used to assess body temperature. There are several advantages of pyrometer optics, including the ability to measure temperature without coming into direct contact with the object, the capacity to measure temperature at all wavelengths, the ability to provide good accuracy when compared to radiation pyrometers, and the measurement's independence from distance and object. Infrared thermometers detect the infrared radiation flux of colder objects to determine their temperature.
