VideoProc Converter is a multipurpose video toolkit that serves to convert, compress, edit, download, and record videos, audios, and/or DVDs, powered by AMD/Intel/NVIDIA GPU acceleration. The very latest version 5.3 released today has added support for more types of videos with Alpha channels for transparency and included an output preset for Apple iPhone 14 Plus. It has solved the recording issue while using an external webcam, fixed the occasional crash when reading the MediaInfo of some video files, and figured out the stuttering problem when launching on the new macOS 13.0.

For the around-the-corner Christmas and New Year, VideoProc Converter can help users do more:

1. Convert classic movies/DVDs for playback with families

The software is a great helper for converting DVDs and videos for playback on an HDTV, computer, iPhone, iPad, or game console. Users can enjoy 4K movies with families and prepare Christmas songs for a party within 3 clicks.

2. Convert holiday videos for better editing

Many people record videos of the gathering moment with a GoPro, DJI, or 4K/HD camera. But not all of those media types are compatible with a third-party editing application. VideoProc converts them to ProRes, DV, and x264 to make them editable while keeping the intra-frame and uncompressed attributes.

3. Process and compress videos for social media platforms

For anyone who wants to make a video of FIFA World Cup highlights or holiday memories, VideoProc Converter is the tool to go with. Its quick-edit toolbox has 29 tools to cut, merge, crop, change speed, adjust color, rotate, and so on; it also provides 6 ways to reduce the file size such that the videos can be uploaded to YouTube, Facebook, TikTok, Instagram, and other social platforms according to their requirements.

In addition, the software has a built-in downloader to gather videos, audios, subtitles, M3U8, and live streams, and a recorder to record computer screens or webcam.

“Amidst the bombardment of Christmas and After-Christmas sales available, it can be tricky to pick up a good deal. It’s wise to check out our biggest annual shopping event because it features significant savings and an all-in-one solution,” Angie added.
