Iran's nationwide uprising is marking its 100 days on Saturday following a new outburst of nightly protests by people from all walks of life in cities checkered across the country. Protesters braved the bitter winter cold and snowfall in many cities.

Protests in Iran have to this day expanded to at least 280 cities. Over 750 people have been killed and more than 30,000 are arrested by the regime's forces, according to sources of the Iranian opposition People's Mojahedin Organization of Iran \(PMOI/MEK\). The names of 601 killed protesters have been published by the PMOI/MEK.

Early reports on Sunday morning indicate that merchants and store owners in the city of Bukan, northwest Iran, are on strike in solidarity with the nationwide uprising against the mullahs' regime.

In Bukan, a large crowd gathered to commemorate protesters murdered by security forces during the nationwide uprising. The gathering turned into an anti-regime rally, with protesters chanting, "Martyrs don't die!" and "Death to Khamenei!" Protesters lit fires in the streets and chanted slogans against the regime.

Another protest rally was held near Kamyaran on the 40th day of the murder of Borhan Karami, another protester killed by security forces. Protesters vowed to continue the path of the martyrs of the revolution.

On Saturday morning, employees of the local Real Estate Registration Organization were on strike in cities across the country. This includes the cities of Mashhad, Yazd, Khalkhal, Izeh, Azna, Dorud, Aligudarz, Takestan, Haftgel, Khorramdasht, Ramhormoz, Joghatay, among others.

In Tehran's Tehranpars district, a group of students held a protest rally, chanting "Death to Khamenei!" and "Death to the dictator!"

In other reports from Tehran, locals began chanting "Death to the dictator!" in the City Theater Metro Station and security forces responded by firing tear gas into the building. Protesters in the Narmak district of the Iranian capital also took to the streets and began chanting: "Khamenei, you dictator! We will bury you!"

Similar rallies were being reported from the city of Saqqez, Mahsa Amini's hometown in Kurdistan Province, western Iran.

In Sanandaj, protesters lit fires at the Nabbovat square and chanted anti-regime slogans. In Mashhad, Iran's second-largest city located in northeast Iran, protesters marched in the streets and chanted "Death to the dictator!" In Karaj, locals held a protest rally despite heavy snowfall. In Isfahan, protesters marched in the streets at night.

To this day over 750 people have been killed and more than 30,000 are arrested by the regime's forces, according to sources of the Iranian opposition People's Mojahedin Organization of Iran MEK. The names of 601 killed protesters have been published by the MEK.

In Bukan, a large crowd gathered to commemorate protesters murdered by security forces during the nationwide uprising. The gathering turned into an anti-regime rally, with protesters chanting, "Martyrs don't die!" and "Death to Khamenei!"

Similar protests and demonstrations were reported in Bandar Abbas, southern Iran, and other cities and towns. This is yet another sign of the Iranian people's devotion to continue these rallies despite all the crackdown measures imposed by the mullahs, let alone the recent executions of two protesters and death sentences issued for many others arrested for taking part in the recent anti-regime demonstrations.

The protests in Iran began following the death of Mahsa Amini. Mahsa (Zhinah) Amini, a 22-year-old woman from the city of Saqqez in Kurdistan Province, western Iran, who traveled to Tehran with her family, was arrested on Tuesday, September 13, at the entry of Haqqani Highway by the regime's so-called "Guidance Patrol" and transferred to the "Moral Security" agency.

She was brutally beaten by the morality police and died of her wounds in a Tehran hospital on September 16. The event triggered protests that quickly spread across Iran and rekindled the people's desire to overthrow the regime.
