Key Trends In The Coffee Capsule Market

One of the latest trends for companies in the coffee capsules market is to use bioplastics and bio-degradable materials for making coffee capsules. Companies in the coffee capsules market are investing in finding ways to use bioplastics and biodegradable materials for making capsules instead of using aluminum and plastic to hold the coffee extract. Capsules made from aluminum and plastics are non-biodegradable and harm the environment thus, pushing the companies towards finding new innovative bio-degradable materials such as polypropylene, which can be shredded and recycled to be used to make coffee capsules. Following the trend, in 2019, Woken launched its line of Nespresso-compatible capsules, which are completely bio-degradable. The bio capsules offered by Woken are made from a bioplastic named Terrablend, which contains 62% of raw materials and is trademarked by Woken. Similarly, Lavazza, an Italy-based food and beverage company, launched its 100% compostable coffee pods, named Eco Caps, in 2019. These Eco Caps can be disposed of in the food waste bin and require six months to degrade.
