Key Trends In The Automotive Safety System Market

New technological developments are a key trend gaining popularity in the automotive safety systems market. The automotive industry is increasingly focusing on integrating smarter and safer safety systems into vehicles for better safety in different terrains and conditions. For instance, in January 2022, Sweden-based truck manufacturer Volvo Vehicles introduced Active Grip Control, a unique safety feature for electric trucks. The new technology significantly improves acceleration, stability, and braking in slippery conditions. The new safety feature also decreases the risk of oversteering and jackknifing when driving unloaded.

Overview Of The Automotive Safety System Market

The automotive safety systems market consists of sales of automotive safety systems and equipment by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that provide safety to passengers in vehicles. Automotive safety systems minimise the risk of injuries, help prevent accidents and mitigate the impacts of collisions. These systems are designed to either work automatically or require drivers to activate them when desired. Common automotive safety systems include seatbelts, airbags, collapsible steering columns, occupant sensing systems, traction control, tyre pressure monitors, anti-lock braking systems (ABS), lane departure warning systems (LDWS), and others.
