The most sought tarp covers were often made of materials like canvas, vinyl, polyethylene and other materials that were purchased in a range of sizes, colors, and thicknesses. They ranged from lightweight to super heavy-duty grades, most of which are very easy to store and deploy for a variety of applications.

Popular uses of tarp coverings included use to cover items such as furniture, equipment and vehicles to protect them from rain, snow, or other types of precipitation, as well as ground covers to protect grass or other surfaces from damage, or to create a temporary floor in a tent or other structures.

Leading segments included heavy-duty tarps that are designed to withstand extreme weather conditions and lighter-weight tarps that are more suitable for use in milder conditions. Also in high demand were tarps with grommets or loops along the edges that can be used to secure the tarp in place using bungee cords, rope, or other fasteners.
