its patent application. Jeff Scaman, founding partner at DUBL Inc., noted, “The USPTO's determination comes at a time when awareness of dual-camera market opportunities is growing. This recognition of DUBL's unique IP reinforces our position as a technology-solution provider for industrial applications in this expansive market.”

In recent months Snapchat announced its dual-camera feature, in a move to compete, according to tech insiders, with BeReal, which was spoofed on Saturday Night Live, in a skit that highlighted the rush to relevance dual camera technology has experienced within the social media ecosphere.

According to Scaman, “DUBL Inc.'s platform of dual camera apps uniquely positions the company to serve real-time mapping, business-to-consumer, and business-to-business markets.” The platform's ability to simultaneously display multiple apps on mobile and stationary display screens offers a customizable platform that can be applied across agriculture, mining, natural and biosciences, as well as supply chain solution vertical sectors.
