The potential of aseptic packaging to react to the requirement for high and uniform product quality, improved nutrient retention, and avoid the bisphenol A (BPA) problem, which is typically found in can liners, is driving market growth. Emerging aseptic processing technologies, such as enhanced isolators, robotics, and packaging materials with higher barrier qualities, are likely to boost the market's future growth. These developing solutions are expected to reduce sterile product contamination hazards while also streamlining packing operations. Many traditional packaging materials generate a large amount of solid waste, which is harmful to the environment and human health. As a result, many packaging companies are replacing them with edible packaging solutions made of probiotics, milk proteins, vitamins, and other ingredients that act as an oxygen barrier for food. Due to this the edible packaging market is primarily driving. Owing to the rise in demand of CVC, the global Aseptic Packaging market is estimated to grow at a CAGR of 10.50% during the forecast period.

Furthermore, in response to growing environmental concerns, governments around the world are enacting strict restrictions to reduce trash output. In addition, antimicrobial agents, pigments, chemical preservatives, and other plasticisers and functional additives are used in edible packaging to improve their protective properties. Demand is also being driven up by the growing popularity of processed goods that require a longer shelf life.

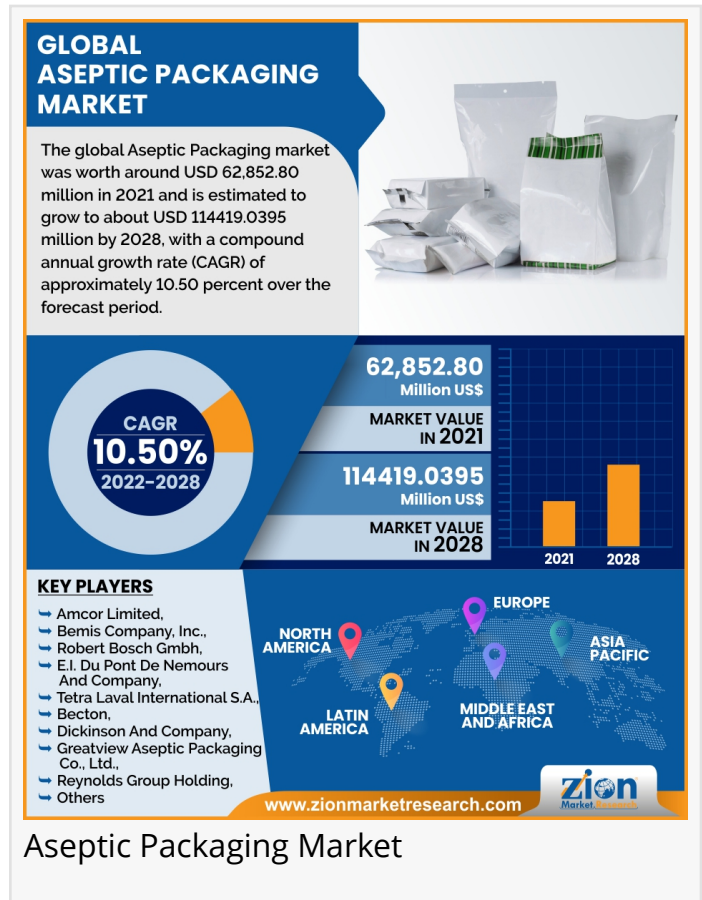

Furthermore, the increased focus on adopting Nano technological solutions to boost food nutritious content, such as Nano encapsulation and multifunctional systems, is likely to boost the edible packaging market over the forecast period.

Global Aseptic Packaging Market

The global Aseptic Packaging market is segregated based on type, material and application. Based on type, the global market is distinguished into Cartons, Bags & pouches, Bottles & cans, Ampoules and Others (bag-in-box packaging, cups, trays, and containers). The segment dominates the market. Based on material, the market is segmented into Plastic, Paper & paperboard, Metal, Glass and Wood. The segment is expected to grow over the forecast period. Based on application, the market is segmented into Food, Beverage, Pharmaceutical and Others. The segment is expected to increase the market.

Due to high adoption rate and the presence of a pool of aseptic packaging manufacturers in the region, North America is expected to dominate the aseptic packaging market. During the forecast period, the Asia-Pacific region is expected to be the fastest-growing market. China is the leading aseptic packaging consumer, followed by India. The aseptic packaging industry is likely to be increased by China's developing food and beverage sectors. With its growing preference for simple product packaging, India is likely to lead the Asia-Pacific aseptic packaging market.

Recent Developments

In November 2020, St Croix ABF and Asppak have teamed up to create novel aseptic beverage packaging processes. This collaboration has created a streamlined procedure that will let firms develop innovative beverages while adhering to the strictest food safety regulations. A high acid pilot plant and testing facility are among the partnership's current capabilities. By the first quarter of 2021, they expected to establish a low acid aseptic facility as well as a packaging facility.

In June 2021, Amcor has introduced the ACT2100 heat seal coating for medical-grade DuPont Tyvek 2 and paper packaging. This next-generation coating technology provides enhanced performance features for healthcare applications and will be manufactured in multiple locations around the world to provide customers with greater flexibility in sourcing their devices from the most appropriate location for manufacturing and packaging.
