

New Book Sees African Americans in the Grip of a Second Bondage

Author Cites Slavery as the First Bondage, Victimology as the Second Bondage

BRONX, NEW YORK, UNITED STATES, February 2, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ -- To understand and solve the problem of educating black males and uplifting black people, Rempson has identified what his research suggests is at root of it.

In a comprehensive analysis, he traces its origin back to what he terms the African American Garden of Eden. In it, W. E. B. Dubois outlasted Booker T. Washington and fathered a tradition which Rempson, a Bookerite, argues has produced a victim identity and an emphasis on the system rather than the self. That system emphasis, he contends, has produced a victim mentality and an array of associated social problems.

Rempson declares that only black males offer a way out because it is entirely "our black males who are keeping us down and curtailing our progress," in contrast to black females, who "are doing OK."

Black males are plagued by what Rempson calls the African American Male School Adaptability Crisis (AMSAC). Their academic performance ranks at the bottom, alone, below black female students and below white, Asian, and Hispanic male students. In large urban areas, their high school dropout rate is 59 percent and, nationally, they lag behind in college attendance and graduation rates. The outcome, Rempson argues, is dysfunctionality and the existence of hedonistic norms which hinder family and community stability.

But while black males are the problem, Rempson contends, it is, nevertheless, only they who can solve it because it takes males to bring up males. However, he elaborates, their crisis is inseparable from the plight of the entire black community, and while black males must be in the vanguard, the entire black community and nation must address it.

Rempson's position is based on an analysis of extensive data and perspectives from various disciplines and sources. That analysis yielded what he concludes are the real causes of the black plight and, thus, made possible the formulation of real remedies. In his eight propositions, he synthesizes what they are, and he further lays out an overall blueprint.

In entirety, the book is a lengthy 20 chapters, but, from the first and last chapters, one can get his message, reading the rest selectively.

Of interest to some, for example, might be his proposed evidence-based African American Male Career Pathway Program, his ideas for Art of Loving (AOL) schools and a Child Family Rights Movement, or his discussion of former President Barak Obama support of a black victim identity.

Of interest to others, for example, might be his treatment of such topics as black intelligent quotient (IQ), black culture, "acting white", racism, police misconduct, Black Lives Matter, or critical race theory.

Throughout, Rempson's conviction is that unless blacks confront their realities, "we will not solve our problems." "Nor," he continues, "can we solve them unless we cut the umbilical cord to white America. We have no right to expect it to be our savior; nor are we justified in perceiving it as our oppressor."

Rempson's forcefully and finely written book is a singular and courageous contribution. Alone, his eight propositions make it a worthy read.

Reviews

"Rempson, the former dean of students at the City University of New York's Bronx Community College, is a lucid writer... it's clear that the author has spent many years thinking about the particular problems of the community and formulating customized solutions to help solve them, as embodied here... A lengthy manifesto for AMCAP that lays out a vision for an ascendant black America." -- Kirkus Review, original edition

Author

"Rempson describes himself simply as an educator, and while some of his arguments are not revelations, others are. For example, he provides a unique angle on Dr. King's attitude on self-reliance, and draws an interesting connection between King and Washington that many would consider startling...Rempson writes from the heart, but with purpose and clarity...is a fresh voice that deserves to be heard...At more than 900 pages, this book is initially daunting. But the narrative is so tidily laid out that, in the end, none of the content seems superfluous." --Blueink Review, original edition

"Rempson powerfully advocates for applying the energy of the civil rights movement to the black family... book is surprising, with prose that can get fiery, and some may find the candor with which he approaches his topics offensive. He outlines a program to help black male children build a strong identity based on their personhood, rather than on the 'cool culture' of the street and the peer group, and calls black males to strong, responsible fatherhood." --Foreword Clarion Review, original edition

(This book is a minor revision of original book, The African American Male School Adaptability Crisis (AMSAC): Its Source and Solution Planted in the African American Garden of Eden), and its complete title is Eight Propositions: Guides to Understanding and Solving from Our African American Garden of Eden the Problem of Educating Black Males and Uplifting Black People.)

Contact/Purchase: <https://rempsonfoundation.org> AuthorHouse, Amazon, Barnes and Noble

Joe Rempson
Rempson Foundation
+1 718-882-3764
www,info@rempsonfoundation.org

This press release can be viewed online at: <https://www.einpresswire.com/article/609818718>

EIN Presswire's priority is source transparency. We do not allow opaque clients, and our editors try to be careful about weeding out false and misleading content. As a user, if you see something we have missed, please do bring it to our attention. Your help is welcome. EIN Presswire, Everyone's Internet News Presswire™, tries to define some of the boundaries that are reasonable in today's world. Please see our Editorial Guidelines for more information.

© 1995-2023 Newsmatics Inc. All Right Reserved.