90% of the world's population. The forum focused on finding solutions to the global crisis, including a proposed shift from a consumerist society to a creative one through the incorporation of the 8 pillars of the Creative Society into the constitutions of every country and the alignment of legislation with the revised constitutions. The forum also suggested the introduction of self-government and the creation of an e-voting platform to allow politicians to implement the will of citizens rather than exercise power.

destruction of the Earth without the implementation of the Creative Society is October 2036. The model, which is based on publicly available data, predicts that by 2028, the conditions for human life on Earth will be almost unbearable.

US politician and 2020 presidential candidate Robby Wells, who will announce whether he will run in the 2024 US presidential election by January 1, 2023, gave a speech at the forum in which he stated that the cornerstone of his campaign, if he chooses to run, will be the building of the Creative Society. He believes that the 8 pillars of the Creative Society, which were formulated by the people themselves, will guarantee a secure, stable, comfortable, and happy life for all people.

Other topics discussed at the forum included global climate event monitoring and eyewitness accounts, data manipulation in databases, the state of the Earth's core and its cosmic destabilizing impact on the solar system, the state of the environment, the benefits of the Creative Society, self-government, economics, technology, and healthcare in the Creative Society, fuel-free energy generators, and two films: "Diary of the Last Man" and "A Housewife's Story."
