Douglas Insights

The growing geriatric population is a key growth driver for the adult incontinence product market. Incontinence is not age-dependent, however, it is more prevalent among the elderly. With an increase in diabetes and stroke worldwide, incontinence incidence rates are expected to rise, resulting in a flood of revenue opportunities for investors. Incontinence products continue to grow due to increasing efforts to educate people about bladder and bowel health. The market for incontinence products is anticipated to shift to reusable and cost-effective products as consumer concerns about adverse environmental impacts grow.
