Key Trends

The below-grade waterproofing market is currently experiencing several key trends. Firstly, an increasing demand for green and eco-friendly solutions has driven the trend towards using more sustainable materials in projects. This shift away from a reliance on petroleum-based products has seen a rise in alternatives such as polymer membranes and other biodegradable materials. Additionally, technological advances have enabled manufacturers to create more efficient and cost-effective systems that offer greater protection against water infiltration while requiring less maintenance over time.

Furthermore, the demand for high-performance structures has led many business owners to choose higher-quality waterproofing options such as liquid-applied membranes or bentonite sheets for their projects.
