Market Overview (2017-2027)

- Forecast CAGR (2022-2027): 23.4%

The growth of the global coffee concentrate market has been driven by the rising consumption of coffee among the youth. Concentrated coffee is majorly available in four different types which are cold brew coffee, iced coffee top roast coffee, and black coffee. The growing demand for cold brew coffee owing to the availability of various coffee brew makers is driving the global market.

Moreover, the increasing product launches by the key players have aided market growth. For instance, in January 2020, Nestlé SA and Starbucks released a new range of coffee products which included cold brew concentrate range and fresh brew range.

Furthermore, the various benefits of coffee concentrates are bolstering the utilisation of the product among the masses. Concentrated coffee aids in fat burning by boosting the metabolism of the body. Additionally, it has also been found effective in enhancing moods, especially among sleep-deprived individuals. Many studies have shown that those who consumed coffee had lower rates of depression.

Concentrated coffee can also be used as a nutritional supplement to improve the mood of older adults as well as enhance their brain function. The changing coffee culture and its increased consumption in substitution of tea are further expected to provide impetus to the coffee concentrate market growth in the upcoming period.

Coffee Concentrate Industry Definition and Major Segments

Coffee concentrates are used for brewing a greater quantity of black coffee in a short amount of time, or for creating a base for a coffee-themed recipe. Ground coffee is used to create brewed coffee by grounding and then putting them through a slow extraction process that utilises cold water.
