Gambling, also known as virtual gambling, is the wagering on casino or sports-related activities via the internet. Online gambling, unlike in-person gambling, does not involve physical interaction between players, and all sessions are moderated by computer programmes.

The global gambling market is expected to be worth around $565.8 billion by 2026, growing at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of around 5.5% from 2020 to 2026.

The growing use of mobile phones for online gaming in public places as well as at home, combined with rising internet penetration, is propelling the market. Furthermore, cultural and legal acceptance, easy access to online gambling, celebrity endorsements, and corporate sponsorships are boosting market growth. Because of the widespread availability of low-cost mobile applications, the market is expected to grow further.

Gambling Market Growth Drivers and Risks

Several drivers have contributed to the expansion of the gambling market: Gambling legalization in more countries: In recent years, many countries have legalized gambling, resulting in an increase in the number of people participating in gambling activities. The rise of online gambling: As the internet and mobile technology have advanced, it has become easier for people to gamble online. As a result, the number of people engaging in online gambling has increased significantly.

The gambling industry also carries a number of risks, including: Dependence: Gambling can become addictive, causing financial and personal problems for those who can't control their habits. Regulation: The gambling industry is highly regulated, and changes in regulations can have a significant impact. Competition: The gambling industry is fiercely competitive, and new entrants may struggle to establish a foothold.
