“When I received the call that my biological sister, Lisa Marie Presley, was rushed to the hospital, I felt a need — a pull — to go to her. Love is the most important thing in this life. I did not allow the Hollywood myth to stop me from making my final attempt to let Lisa Marie know how much she meant to me. She is my family.

As a result of my father's never-ending fame, a myth of delusion has been created — the myth being that Lisa was his “ONLY” child/daughter — an overused phrase intended to influence the masses. Granted, Lisa Marie was the only child of Elvis who was publicly acknowledged. He had other children. As far as I know, I am the eldest.

I was conceived in 1955, when my father was on the back side of fame— just months before The Colonel dug in. Fame and money came between flesh and blood. Fame and money came before truth.

It is hurtful, and wrong, for his children to be disregarded and dismissed, as if we never existed — all in the name of the Hollywood myth. As blood kin, we have much in common that has nothing to do with all the myths that divide us. We share many things, such as a deep connection to music, especially Gospel and Country.

My sister is the latest casualty of the hollow shadow of fame. The weight of Lisa's schedule in the past few weeks — to promote the film and to show her face at Graceland — was too much for her. No one seemed to care that she was literally being propped up. It hurt me to know and see that my sister was in so much pain.

I am here to support and send love to all of my unspoken family that live in the shadow of our father's eternal fame. My public family has the right to know their blood family. We know who we are.-

My love and condolences to my nieces Riley, Harper, and Finley, as well as Danny, Michael, and Priscilla.”
