This unique property was featured extensively throughout the climactic finale of “The Silence of the Lambs” starring the Academy Award winning Best Actress, Jodie Foster (playing FBI Agent Clarice Starling) and featuring the deeply disturbing portrayal of serial killer “Buffalo Bill” played by veteran actor Ted Levine. The home still features many attributes that have remained unchanged since filming took place over 30 years ago!

Buffalo Bill’s House, the real home where the climax to the five-time Academy Award winning film, “The Silence of the Lambs” was filmed, unveiled its newest and most gruesome attraction at the end of last year, the infamous “well” – a replica of the well in the film where cinematic serial killer Buffalo Bill keeps his victims captive. Uncannily similar to the one featured in the climax of the film, the well was recreated, and the reconstructed replica well is an actual hole dug four feet deep into the ground in the basement of the former coal cellar in the house. Guests have since been taking full advantage of the interactive well set and enjoying gruesomely realistic photo opps., many of which appear on their social media feeds.

Nestled at the base of the scenic Laurel Highlands, less than a half mile from the Great Allegheny Passage, Buffalo Bill’s House is only 30 miles south of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.
