and age. With the Education 2.0 Conference, they aspire to present a vibrant platform where changemakers from the education industry can meet with peers and discuss ways and means to revolutionize how we learn and teach.

"This is what makes accepting an award from Education 2.0 so exciting," Londo stated. "There are discussions happening at this progressive conference that wouldn't dare be talked about at other, more institutionalized events," he continued. "Accepting this award among my colleagues who are also innovating future solutions to yesterday's problems, is all the difference. It means we're making progress," Londo concluded.
