Facebook VP of Marketing Announces Divorce from Company

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, UNITED STATES , February 2, 2023

/EINPresswire.com/ -- David Fischer, former Vice President of Marketing & Operations at Facebook, has announced his divorce from the company. Fischer joined Facebook in its early days and helped build the social media giant into what it is today. He was responsible for marketing and advertising efforts, as well as global business operations.

The reasons behind his departure are not publicly known. Fischer has not yet announced his next move, but it's expected that he will continue to play an important role in the tech industry. The impact of his departure from Facebook remains to be seen, but the company is expected to continue its growth trajectory in the coming years.

David Fischer Announces Retirement from Facebook.

Throughout his tenure, Fischer played a key role in growing Facebook from a small startup to one of the world's largest and most influential technology companies. He led teams responsible for revenue, marketing, and business operations, and helped drive the company's revenue from $234 million in 2009 to over $86 billion in 2021.

Fischer commented on his decision, stating, "I am incredibly proud of what we have accomplished at Facebook over the past 10 years. From building a successful ad business to expanding our reach and impact globally, I have been honored to be a part of this amazing journey."

Fischer will be succeeded by his colleague, Sheryl Sandberg, who praised his contributions to the company in a statement, "David has been an invaluable partner to me and a true leader at Facebook. He leaves an indelible mark on the company and will be deeply missed."

Facebook CEO, Mark Zuckerberg, also expressed gratitude for Fischer's contributions, "David has been a critical member of our leadership team and a trusted advisor. He has helped us navigate many challenges and has been instrumental in building the strong foundation we have today. We are grateful for his years of service and wish him all the best in his future endeavors."

Fischer plans to take some time off before pursuing new opportunities in the tech industry. Facebook is confident that his successor, Sandberg, will continue the company's success and growth in the coming years.

The company will host a farewell reception for Fischer in the coming weeks.
