Some Key Highlights From the Report

The fixed wing segment is expected to register significant revenue growth rat during the forecast period. The range of height is higher for fixed-wing aircraft. Surveys and agricultural projects can be completed more easily due to the vast amount of land and geography that may be covered. Multi-rotor aircraft can't cover a lot of area in a single flight, hence fixed wing planes are more efficient.

The environmental control system segment is expected to register substantial revenue growth rate over the forecast period. Through research, the underlying processes that enable comfortable and secure airline environments have become extensively known. Future research efforts will progressively focus on identifying and elaborating the interdependency of components in order to greatly improve the cabin atmosphere of aircraft. These factors are expected to drive revenue growth of the segment.

The Original Equipment Manufacturer (OEM) segment is expected to register moderate revenue growth rate over the forecast period. OEMs can gather enough dependability information as a stakeholder to modify maintenance plans, doing away with the need for needless maintenance labor. Increase in business jet and military aircraft deliveries across the globe leads to expansion. Research and Development (R&D) projects to produce technologically superior aircraft computer components is expected to drive revenue growth of the segment.
