Emergen Research

According to the most recent analysis by Emergen Research, the worldwide vaccine market size reached USD 45.20 billion in 2021 and is anticipated to experience a revenue CAGR of 9.7% over the projected period. One of the major drivers propelling market revenue development is the rise in infectious diseases in emerging nations. Infectious disease prevalence is rising globally, which puts a greater load on healthcare systems and hinders socioeconomic development. Additionally, the prevalence of infectious diseases including malaria, the flu, hepatitis, and HIV/AIDS is on the rise, which is fueling revenue growth. Additionally, the rise of microbial strains that are resistant to medication has complicated efforts to tackle infectious diseases like pneumonia, cholera, malaria, and diarrhoea, among others.

Rising demand for new drugs to replace those that have lost efficiency, as well as investment in vaccine research & development, are driving market growth. Increased financing from public and private groups, as well as favorable government policies, have all contributed to the global vaccine market's expansion.

However, extended delay of vaccine production is a factor driving hamper market revenue growth to some extent during the forecast period. Vaccine shortages are limiting market development owing to various factors such as manufacturing or production issues and inadequate stocks.

Some Key Highlights from the Report

The monovalent vaccine segment accounted for a significant revenue share in 2021. Monovalent vaccination is intended to immunize only one microbe and one antigen (for example, measles vaccine). This type of vaccination is preferred for inducing a high immunological response.

The pediatric segment revenue is expected to register a steady growth rate during the forecast period. Increasing attempts by companies to develop effective pediatric vaccinations for prevention of illness is expected to drive pediatric vaccine segment revenue growth.

The recombinant vaccine segment is expected to lead in terms of revenue contribution to the global market over the forecast period. Recombinant vaccines can be easily produced and have lesser risks as compared to other vaccines.

The Asia Pacific market is expected to register a considerably rapid growth rate in the global vaccine market over the forecast period owing to increased vaccine awareness and immunization initiatives. Rising cases of severe infectious diseases including novel coronavirus disease and growing demand for COVID-19 vaccines are driving market growth in this region.
