During surgery, external fixators are utilised to immobilise the bones and promote bone fracture healing. After serious soft tissue or bone ruptures, external fixators offer support to the bones and soft tissues. The use of bone external fixators helps to restore limb length, protect soft tissue following bone fracture, and realign misaligned bones. While enabling movement of the adjacent joints, the external fixators also guarantee the correct compression, extension, or neutralisation of bone implantation. They not only assist with properly aligning the bones but also lessen muscle atrophy and edoema (the deposit of extra fluid) brought on by complete immobility of a leg.
