The popularity of hoodies is due in part to their ability to be worn in a variety of different situations and environments. They can be used as outerwear when it is cold outside, or they can be layered under other clothes when it is warmer outside. Additionally, hoodies can be worn as an extra layer of warmth when it is cold inside.

The demand for hoodies is also due to the trend of wearing them in colder climates. For example, in Europe, hoodies are often worn during winter months because it keeps people warm. In Asia, people often wear hoodies when it's cold outside because they believe that it makes them look cool and stylish. The hoodie market is expected to continue to grow in the future. This is because there are a lot of different companies that are producing hoodies. This means that there is a lot of competition for consumers' attention. However, this also means that there are a lot of different options for consumers to choose from.
