restraining the market growth. The high production cost is mainly due to the fact that kiwifruit is a labor-intensive crop and requires significant amount of manpower for harvesting, packing and distribution. Limited shelf space is another constraint hampering market growth. This is because kiwifruit preserves are not commonly found in retail stores across the globe, limiting their exposure to potential buyers. However, these limitations could be overcome by increasing demand from key regional markets such as China and Southeast Asia.
