Catheters Market Dynamics:

Drivers:

Preference for minimally invasive procedures is increasing:

It is expected that the market for future catheters will grow as a result of the rising number of patients choosing minimally invasive procedures.

An increasing number of patients are suffering from urological and cardiac problems

Many catheter types have been made available to treat various diseases, including intravenous catheters and specialty catheters. This will increase the market for catheters in the coming years.

Geriatric population growing:

Market share for catheters will rise due to the rising number of elderly patients and those with diabetes who are more likely to develop urological and cardiac diseases.

Challenges:

Risk Of Infection:

It is expected that the market for catheters will slow down if there are more cases of infection caused by catheter use.
