creating this timeless work as a gift to the world. "I have been playing music for more than a decade and have been in two groups that I don't want to divulge," he continued to explain how important music has always been in his life. According to Fondu, he began recording himself in his bedroom in 2001 using his mother's very first laptop, and since he was so driven and passionate about what he was doing, he made rapid progress in the field of digital music creation. He had no piano talents, but he could play songs that were considered acceptable musically. His passion for music brought him to Nigeria, where he got the opportunity to manage the production of the Indispensables song "I'M FREE," which featured Junior Ried, because at that time, Fondu was the senior producer at Grafton Records Port Harcourt with the name "Flames". He also worked with individuals like Jesus Boy, Mtrill, and Rugged Man, etc. In order to enhance his education, Fondu moved to China in 2010. This enabled him to increase both his musical production and commercial skills.

It is known that Fondu was the first foreigner to create a recording studio in Zhenjiang, specifically Jiangsu University, which eventually developed into a record company. His main initiatives for his university, which he completed while learning video production and for which he received accolades from an international college, propelled him into the public eye (newspapers and Television of the Republic of China). Fondu, is now working on his upcoming song which he, hinted at working with Olivia Castriota, who is known for her work on the songs "Appetite for You" and "Girls Just Want to Have Fun" A musician from Indianapolis named Dwani and a Tanzania superstar named Muki Mingo would also be featured in the song, he added. It will result in anarchy because he defined his music as a roller coaster.
