Looking forward, IMARC Group expects the market to reach US$ 6.2 Billion by 2027, exhibiting a growth rate (CAGR) of 4.9% during 2022-2027.

Cassava starch, alternatively referred to as tapioca, represents white and fine crystalline flour procured from fresh cassava roots through washing and pulping. It is available in several product types, such as native starch, modified starch, and sweeteners. These cassava starch variants are a good source of iron, folate, amylopectin, amylose, calcium, manganese, carbohydrates, and calcium, which facilitate blood sugar management and support gut health. They even have freeze-thaw stability and high-paste clarity and contain vitamin C that, promotes collagen production and immune function. As a result, cassava starch products find extensive applications across numerous industries, including food and beverages (F&B), paper, textiles, etc.

Cassava Starch Market Trends:

The shifting preferences toward ready-to-eat (RTE) foods and the elevating product usage as a thickening agent in yogurt, bakery items, soups, ice creams, noodles, and soft drinks are primarily driving the cassava starch market. In addition to this, the growing product demand from the pulp and paper industry for improving pulp utilization, paper quality, and production rate is acting as another significant growth-inducing factor. Moreover, the escalating need for the starch in the pharmaceutical segment as an inert carrier to formulate specific medicines and in the textile industry for sizing and printing, on account of its abrasion resistance properties and ability to form a bond with the fiber, is also positively influencing the market growth. Apart from this, the rising employment of the starch variant in ethanol production that can be used as a biofuel in automobiles for minimizing carbon emissions is expected to bolster the cassava starch market over the forecasted period.
