NEW YORK, NY, UNITED STATES, February 14, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Global Animal Nutrients Market was estimated at USD 23.75 Bn by 2022. It is expected to grow at a CAGR 11.63% to USD 36.62 Bn through 2030.

Animal nutrients are the animal's dietary requirements. They include minerals, enzymes and macronutrients as well as vitamins and vitamins that are essential for efficient meat and milk production and proper bone structure. Animal nutrition is the study of the structure and characteristics of feed materials and the way they are converted, used, and excreted in the body cells and digestive tracts of monogastric animals (pigs broilers layers, layers), ruminants, sheep, cattle, goats, and lower digestive tract fermenters. This information is used to create an economically viable and practical system for animal nutrition that allows animals to reach their full potential. It mainly addresses the nutritional needs of animals in agriculture, food production, zoos and wildlife management.

The animal nutrition market is booming due to increased demand for safe, nutritious animal feeds, stricter antibiotic use restrictions, and increased awareness by producers about animal health. Global demand for animal-derived food products such as meat, eggs, milk and fish is increasing in order to provide better nutrition to animals. The essential nutrients for animal reproduction, meat production, and bone formation are macronutrients.

Rising raw material prices are a major challenge for feed producers around the globe. The natural sources of vitamins, feed acids, and antioxidants are seeds, barks, trees, and leaves. These sources are more expensive and there are strict restrictions on waste biomaterials. This is limiting the market for feed additives. The industry is concerned about the availability of feed. As the world's population increases and food demands rise, so does the business' ability to obtain basic feeds like wheat, corn, and barley.
