Coach travel is generally considered better than single-car use for several reasons:

Environmental impact: Coach travel produces fewer emissions per person than single-car use, as the emissions are spread out over a larger number of passengers. This makes it a more environmentally sustainable mode of transportation.

Cost-effectiveness: Coach travel is usually more cost-effective than single-car use, as the cost of fuel and maintenance is shared among a large number of passengers.

Convenience: Coach travel eliminates the need for individuals to worry about parking, navigation, and fuel costs, making it a convenient option for longer journeys.

Increased capacity: Coaches have a higher passenger capacity than cars, making them ideal for group travel. This can be especially beneficial for large families, school trips, or group tours.

Improved road safety: Coaches are generally larger and more visible on the road, making them safer than single cars. They also have experienced drivers who are trained to operate the vehicle safely.
