XDATA MAGNETO

TALLINN, ESTONIA, February 18, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Over the past two decades C6ISTAR Alliance partners have been very fortunate to find themselves at the forefront of innovation in line with the requirements of their many and varied clients worldwide. They work in varied fields dealing with threats of terrorism, trafficking of weapons and people, wildlife and land protection, misinformation, disinformation and malinformation.

Andrew Grunstein, Founding Member C6ISTAR Alliance had this to say about the strategic importance of the Alliance:
“Technology advances rapidly meaning that today's SOP’s and TTPs need to evolve in equal measure to meet the challenges faced in the field in near real-time. In order to address and overcome these challenges, clients are demanding superior capabilities and we are responding by bringing together an Alliance of subject matter experts and technology innovators that can integrate solutions across domains for better operational effectiveness.”

The future of warfare is likely to focus less on firepower and more on the power of information and the way it connects a military's forces through the concepts of command, control, communications, computers, cyber, combat systems, intelligence, surveillance, target acquisition, reconnaissance, and information operations (C6ISTAR.IO). More than ever, the advantage will lie with whichever side can collect the most vital information, accurately and quickly analyze it, and then rapidly and securely disseminate the information and associated instructions to forces.
