India Higher Education Market Trends:

The expanding population of school-going students is primarily driving the India higher education market. In addition to this, the launch of several favorable policies by government bodies, including the National Accreditation Regulatory Authority for Higher Educational Institutions Bill and the Foreign Educational Institutions Bill, aimed at boosting the academic sector and the increasing application of the Study in India program are acting as significant growth-inducing factors.

Moreover, the escalating industrial collaboration among many private colleges and universities to meet global standards and continuously provide the students with all the necessary exposure through practical training methods is also positively influencing the market across the country. Besides this, the rising availability of non-conventional course options, including physiotherapy, optometry, visual effects (VFX) and animation, hotel management, graphic designing, digital marketing, etc., are expected to propel the India higher education market over the forecasted period.
