

The No-Source Sales Model Revolutionizes Cross-Border E-Commerce

LONDON, LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, February 27, 2023 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Veronica, a successful entrepreneur, has shared her story of financial success using the no-source sales model. Originally from Serbia, Veronica began selling her own products on Amazon at the age of 24 and has since become a full-time consignment seller. With the no-source sales model, Veronica has been able to work only two hours a day, travel the world, and even employ her own mother.

The no-source sales model allows individuals to open a store and sell goods without holding inventory, which means they can accept orders and generate significant profits without significant upfront costs. The platform has attracted buyers and sellers from all over the world, and suppliers from as many as 67 countries.

Veronica's success is a testament to the potential of the no-source sales model. The dropshipping business can be run from anywhere with an internet connection, making it an attractive option for "digital nomads" who want to travel and earn money while working.

According to a recent press release, The No-Source Sales company has experienced significant consistent growth over the past three years. The company said that the no-source sales model is in a period of rapid development, just like the previous e-commerce platforms. The growth of the platform is indeed amazing, and it has the potential to become a weapon for cross-border e-commerce.

That said, the no-source sales model has created a wave of success for many entrepreneurs in cross-border e-commerce. By eliminating the need for inventory, the platform has lowered the barrier to entry for many who wish to start their own business. Furthermore, if a senior seller on the mall platform invites you, there are no fees to open a store, making it even more accessible.
