OMEGA, known for its precision timekeeping and wristwatches, became the official timekeeper for many sporting events, including the Olympic Games, and supplied watches to the British Royal Air Force and American Army during World War II. During the Apollo program, OMEGA watches were used by the astronauts and ground crew to ensure precision timekeeping during the missions, and the OMEGA Speedmaster became the first watch worn on the moon during the Apollo 11 mission. OMEGA's association with the Apollo program helped establish the watch brand as cool and desirable.
