Europe Carpets and Rugs Market: Overview

A carpet is a type of textile floor covering that generally has an upper layer of pile linked to a backing. Traditionally, the pile was formed of wool, but during the twentieth century, synthetic fibers such as polypropylene, nylon, or polyester have been commonly utilized since they are less expensive than wool. The pile of the carpet is often made up of knotted tufts that are heat-treated to keep their structure.

A rug is a thick, heavy piece of cloth with a nap or pile that is used as a floor finish. Rugs are smaller in size than carpets and are intended to cover a limited area. The growing consumer preference for interior décor, along with rising spending power, has enhanced the Europe appeal of carpets and rugs.
